PARTNER

Steve Weber is a partner in Peckar & Abramson's Washington D.C. office and co-chair of Peckar & Abramson's Government Contracting & Infrastructure Practice, leading the firm's federal government contracting efforts. He has 35+ years of experience representing domestic and international contractors in a wide range of construction litigation and governmental contract matters in and outside the U.S.

Steve has represented domestic and international construction contractors on power projects, high rise projects and major infrastructure projects, among others. His experience also includes representing contractors performing projects for the United States government both domestically and abroad. Steve has provided construction and government contractor clients with contract development advice, project performance counseling and preparation and litigation of claims, including defense of alleged False Claims Act violations and Qui Tam actions. He has also advised local contractors and developers on private construction projects, including office buildings, condominiums and mixed-use facilities. Clients represented include the full range of stakeholders in the construction industry as well as firms performing under a public contract in a broad range of industries.

Steve has extensive alternative dispute resolution experience as well as trial experience before numerous state and federal courts, arbitration tribunals and boards of contract appeals. He has frequently assisted clients in responding to cure notices as well as handling terminations for default and convenience.
